Everybody reads -

THE BULLETIN

This issue of the bulletin represents something of a change from the past. A majority of the present staff believe it desirable to extend the scope of the bulletin from news coverage to feature material of all kinds. It wishes to provide for the community an opportunity for public speech and is prepared to relax the conventional "editorial" discipline in order to encourage participation in its pages. All work will be signed so that credit may be given where credit is due. It has sacrificed the advantage of "bulletin policy" for the delights of individual responsibility. Have, then, no fear of the irascible editor: these pages are open to your news reports, articles, exhortations, illustrations, creative writing, and what have you. That's the question: what have you? ...M.C.R.
